The Sword and the Pen.

Thou art a tyrant, glittering blade:
Thou art a tyrant, thou art a tyrant,
Fair Freedom in an hour,
When in despair she placed on thee
Her all—her future destiny;
Thine own true name is power.

The pen is—would heaven its gentle way
Might rule the universe to-day,
And plunge thee evermore
Deep in thy scabbard; there to rust,
And mingle with corroding dust,
One of the things of yore.

But it is thine, oh! ruthless steel,
To make man's bleeding, proud heart feel
Thine ever-galling chain;
Thine to put to death the right,
And shout in victory, might, oh! might,
How glorious is thy reign.

And who dost wield thee?—a strange hand?
Barbaric tribe? or polished lord?
Or Freedom's noblest sons?
All, all bow at thy bloody shrine,
All hate thee, yet none dare constrain
Thee to thy rightful doom.

Yes, thou wilt ever hold thy sway,
And rule man and his destiny,
While man rules here below:
Thine whose right it is to reign,
Shalt sin, and sword, and bondage chain,
But not till then:—no—no.

LOST IN THE CATACOMBS.—The Paris catacombs, once visited by all the strangers who came sight-seeing to the French capital, and afterwards closed to the public as unsafe, are, as most people are doubtless aware, old quarries, extending under a portion of the Faubourg St. Germain—the streets of La Harpe, St. Jacques, Vaugirard, and others, are also under the Pantheon, the Observatory, the Odeon Theatre, and other large buildings. The roof or crust of these vaults is, as may be imagined from the weight it supports, of great thickness and solidity, but in certain places it is comparatively thin. It was about 1785 that the catacombs first received human remains. A quantity of bones removed thither from the church-house of Innocent. During the revolution of 1789 they served as burial places to numerous victims, and from 1792 to 1811 large quantities of bones were deposited in them, taken from churches that were pulled down, and from cemeteries that were closed. Three staircases lead into the catacombs. Great precautions have, of course, been taken to prevent any falling in of the ground, and the place is watched and kept in repair. A few days ago M. Katory, one of the guardians, wishing to have a look at the bones in one of the galleries, went down with a lantern, and an architect. Carrying a lighted candle, he conducted three persons to a distance of more than a quarter of an hour's walk from the entrance. Incredible as it appears, the candle was unextinguished by a puff of air, and none of the party had matches! They had scarcely reached the spot where they were to work, when a puff of air extinguished the light. In the dark there was little hope of retracing their steps, for the bones and winds were numerous. It was more likely they would get deeper into the labyrinth. Nevertheless, Katory, judging that, from the point where they were, it was impossible anybody could hear them, bade his companions to follow him, and sought his way out. But, after groping for several hours in profound darkness, he felt it was a hopeless case, so he shouted a halt, and the four men strained their lungs in shouting for help. Hour after hour passed, and no succor came or sound replied. At last, towards two o'clock in the morning, when they had been for eleven hours in this immense subterranean graveyard, when they were exhausted by fatigue and hunger, and tormented by the fear of being forgotten, they suddenly heard a voice inquiring what they were doing there. Some matches were thrown down to them, and the candle was lighted. They found they were just below the street of Duguey Trouin. It appeared that a compositor, going to his home in that street at the still hour of two a. m., heard faint cries, which seemed to come from beneath his feet. In the noisy daytime they would have been inaudible. Unable to account for the phenomenon, he hurried off to the nearest police station, whence some sergent de ville accompanied him to the spot. These men knew that the catacombs passed under that street, and it was through a draft hole nearly opposite to the compositor's house that they were able to communicate with the prisoners.

TELEGRAPHING THE SCRIPTURES.—A QUEER TALE OF THE N. Y. PRESS.—The enterprise of the N. Y. Herald in all matters relative to the Prince of Wales has been most surprising. As an illustration of it, take the following story, which I believe is entirely true, and well known to the press of New York. The Prince was about to visit Niagara Falls, and all the New York papers were alike anxious to give an early report of his visit, descriptive of how he liked the Falls, how the Falls looked when irradiated by the presence of Royalty, how fast the water rushed on that particular day, how the Prince enjoyed himself, whether he was wetted with the spray, whether he whistled the air of Henry's Russell Mighty Niagara, or recited to his Grace of Newcastle the verses of Charles Mackay, and other such edifying and mighty informative information. The Times wanted to be the first in its report, so did the Tribune; but the Herald, with its elephantine might, determined that none of its contemporaries should mount so much capital of the Prince as it intended to do itself. Mr. House was at Niagara ready to report the proceedings to Mr. Bennett, the proprietor of the Herald, at New York. The Prince had not arrived, and there was a chance of the Times or Tribune getting possession of the wires before the Herald. In his perplexity, Mr. House flashed along a message to Mr. Bennett, asking him what he was to do in order to keep the wires open. "Telegraph me the Book of Genesis," was the response. "That was done. Still the report of the Prince was not ready. 'What am I to do now?' asked Mr. House. "Telegraph the Book of Revelation and the clerks turned to the end of the Bible and telegraphed accordingly. In the office of the New York Herald are the two Books of Holy Writ as thus telegraphed—the first time, I suppose, that ever a chapter of the Scriptures was sent along a wire. The telegraphing of the Book of Genesis alone cost, I believe, $700.—Letter from Philadelphia.

"That which thou hast to do, do with all thy might," said a clergyman to his son one morning. "So I did, this morning," said Bill, with an enthusiastic gleam in his eye. "Ah! what was it, darling?" and the father's fingers ran through his offspring's curls. "Why, I wallowed Jack Edwards," said the young hopeful, "till he yelled like a holler, and you should just have heard him holler, dad!" The father looked unhappy, while he explained that the precept did not apply to any act like that, and concluded mildly with, "You should not have done that, my child." "Then he'd wallowed me," replied the young hopeful. "Better," said the sire, "for you to have fled from the wrath to come." "Yes, but," replied the hopeful, by way of a clincher, "Jack can run twice as fast as I can." The old man sighed, went to his study, and endeavored to compose himself.

The Rev. Rowland Hill used to ride a great deal, and by exercise preserved vigorous health. On one occasion, when asked by a medical friend what physician and apothecary he employed, he replied, "My physician has always been a horse, and my apothecary an ass."
